Phoenix Square pitches for office business

Business support organisations were given a tour of office space available for creative firms at Leicester's newest arts development.

Representatives from the likes of Business Link and the Prince's Trust attended the event at Phoenix Square, which opened last month.

The tour was organised by Leicester City Council's LCB Depot, which is responsible for managing the 22 workspaces, and developer Blueprint, which is marketing the larger office studios.

Blueprint development director Peter Connolly said: "The combination of different uses within the building means that any business looking to set up shop here will experience something unlike any other office building that I can think of.

"The only way in which you can really appreciate what has been built within its four walls, is to come and have a look for yourself – which is exactly what this event aimed to do and exactly what we hope the delegates will encourage others to do."

Supporting innovation in the East Midlands

Peter Chandler, from the city council, said there had been "considerable interest" in the premises from start-up firms.

Craig Pearson, from Business Link East Midlands, said: "The facilities as a whole are a fantastic asset to the city and the business community."
